HOW TO OBTAIN A PUBLICATION IN THE LIST BELOW:

As a member of the NATO HQ staff you can borrow books (Type: M) for a period of one month and magazines for one week. Reference works (Type: REF) must be consulted in the Library. People from outside NATO can borrow books through their local library via the interlibrary loan system.

COMMENT OBTENIR UNE PUBLICATION MENTIONNÉE DANS LA LISTE CI-DESSOUS:

En tant que membre du personnel de l’OTAN vous pouvez emprunter des livres (Type: M) pour une période d’un mois et des revues pour une semaine. Les livres de référence (Type: REF) sont à consulter sur place. Les personnes n’appartenant pas à l’OTAN peuvent s’adresser à leur bibliothèque locale et emprunter des ouvrages via le système de prêt inter-bibliothèques.

HOW TO OBTAIN OTHER LIBRARY PUBLICATIONS:

All previous Library publications edited since 1999 are available on the NATO Intranet site at http://nt15.hq.nato.int/library (Minerva network) or http://nt18/library (EAPC network).

'This book examines the CFE Treaty both in terms of the Treaty commitments, and in terms of the debate over the Treaty and its ratification in order to deepen understanding of the different national attitudes to security at the end of the Cold War. It includes an analysis not only of the Treaty of November 1990, but also the revised version of 1992 (which sets out the limits for all the ex-Soviet states), and the CFE 1A agreement, in which states declared maximum levels for their military personnel.'

'This study contains parallel analyses of the large-scale historical forces that shaped the CFE Treaty, on the one hand, and the evolution of the textual intricacies of the treaty that give it operational meaning, on the other. The study's contribution to the literature on CFE is threefold. First, it provides a thorough analysis and new documentation of the political roots and practical effects of the CFE regime. Second, it offers a unique assessment of the role played by the CFE process in the post-Cold War transformation of Europe. Finally, it summarizes the lessons of the CFE experience for future conventional arms control initiatives.'

'This monograph examines the CFE Treaty with respect to the process of implementation to date and prospects for final implementation in November 1995. The author describes the basic points of the treaty and the danger posed by the ongoing disagreement between NATO and the Russian Federation over the limitations imposed by the treaty on Russian forces in the 'flank areas'. He analyzes the positions of the primary NATO members, Russian Federation, and Ukraine, as well as the United States; and places the treaty in the broader context of Russian foreign policy and the future of conventional arms control.'

'This study explores the future role of conventional arms control in enhancing European security. Chapter 1 briefly examines the history of conventional arms-control negotiations and agreements to determine the political basis necessary for their success. Chapter 2 focuses on the implementation of the CFE Treaty and its prospects. Chapter III discusses the May 1996 CFE Review Conference, possible future arms-control negotiations, and their relationship to evolving European security structures.'

Konventionell Rustungskontrolle.
The CFE Treaty has been a huge success, achieving the elimination of thousands of tanks and other armaments across Europe. However, the bloc-to-bloc context in which the Treaty was originally negotiated has been overtaken by the transformed security situation in Europe. The author explains how the challenge of adapting the Treaty to the new parameters of European security has been taken up by NATO.

After nearly three years of negotiations, on November 19 of last year at the OSCE Summit in Istanbul the 30 states parties to the Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (CFE) Treaty signed a treaty adaptation agreement which replaces the outdated, Cold War era structure of the original treaty. This article briefly addresses, first of all the history of the CFE Treaty. Then the main revisions to the treaty and the major obstacles which had to be overcome during the negotiations are analysed.
The Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe is the most comprehensive and successful arms control agreement for conventional weapons of all times. Since its signing by the then member states of NATO and the Warsaw Pact, more than 58,000 conventional weapons were destroyed and more than 3,000 inspections were performed in monitoring the observance of the treaty (verification). However, this success should not obscure the fact that the CFE treaty needs to be revised in some respects. The security environment during the phase of origin has drastically changed. Germany's reunification was still possible to be taken into account in the negotiations of the treaty, but not the - already foreseeable - disintegration of the Warsaw Pact, the break-up of the Soviet Union, and the splitting up of Czechoslovakia into two republics. Really important was only that the decisive goal - the treaty's entry into force - was not be jeopardized by the changes in the security situation.
The pressures on the Alliance to deal with the foregoing challenges as a new strategic concept is being developed are revealed most clearly in the evolution of the CFE Treaty. After a brief review of the issues and processes marked for review, this article examines changes agreed or under way in the treaty, itself a symbol of the hopes and fears of nations and international institutions regarding the role of the Russian Federation in European affairs. Other aspects of the convergence of NATO-related initiatives are analyzed and summarized.

This article considers the interaction of NATO and the Conventional Forces in Europe Treaty as two principal tools for providing post-Cold War European security. The article suggests that the conventional wisdom, which typically envisions CFE adaptation as a bill-payer to placate the Russians over NATO enlargement is wrong because CFE has very little flexibility to perform this role. Rather, it is NATO modernization which must account for the larger share of change in European security. Finally, the article suggests a symbiotic relationship between NATO and CFE in which CFE shapes the environment and limits the size of likely conflicts to dimensions that NATO can handle, and NATO provides the military response necessary to deal with the trouble.
