Guiding Principles

The basic guiding principle is for this humanitarian assistance to remain: "as civilian as possible, as military as necessary," in line with the United Nations "Oslo Guidelines" (revised) on humanitarian assistance:

- The Fund consists entirely of voluntary donations and is established under the auspices of the Commander of ISAF (COMISAF), who is responsible for its sound financial management. NATO's North Atlantic Council, through the Senior Civilian Representative (SCR), is regularly updated on the implementation of the Fund.
- Planning for rapid post-operations humanitarian action is integrated into the military planning of operations which are likely to have immediate humanitarian consequences. Towards this end, and without compromising operational security, COMISAF and regional commanders liaise closely with relevant civilian entities to evaluate and plan to address the immediate humanitarian consequences of military operations.
- COMISAF regularly consults with the Senior Civilian Representative on project funding.
- When expenditure is likely to exceed €300,000, COMISAF consults with the Heads of Mission in Kabul of the countries which have contributed to the Fund.
- The Fund may be used only to finance rapid humanitarian assistance to the population directly affected by a military operation. Assistance should include, but not be limited to: food, water, shelter, essential medicines and essential repairs. No longer-term reconstruction activities should be undertaken, but neither should immediate relief undermine longer-term reconstruction plans.
- The implementation of ongoing humanitarian measures should be transferred to civilian actors as soon as circumstances allow. The decision for this transfer will be taken by COMISAF in consultation with the Senior Civilian Representative.
