

General Austin S. Miller
Commander, Resolute Support

United States Army General Austin Scott Miller, NATO-led Resolute Support mission and United States Forces-Afghanistan commander, most recently commanded the Joint Special Operations, Command where he was responsible for global special operations in support of U.S. national defense.

General Miller has extensive experience in counterterrorism operations alongside NATO and regional partners.

As a senior military officer, he led the U.S. Army Maneuver Center of Excellence, where he modernized training for all U.S. Army Infantry and Armor Soldiers. A career special operations officer, General Miller has commanded U.S. combat formations at every level.

General Miller was among the first American Soldiers to deploy to Afghanistan after September 11, 2001, and later helped create and lead the Pakistan-Afghanistan Coordination Center as a senior leader on the U.S. Joint Staff. Since 2013, General Miller commanded special operations units in Afghanistan, including the NATO Special Operations Command, the Special Operations Joint Task Force and Combined Forces Special Operations Command.

His awards and decorations are illustrative of his combat experience. He was awarded two Purple Hearts, a Bronze Star for Valor and the Combat Infantryman Badge with Star.